Widowed with a young child and deeply in debt, Sally Jones has no choice but to seek a new life out West, and Davis Carter seems like the right man to start over with. His letters say he is God-fearing man with a young son, and she tells him that she can provide them with the womans touch their home is missing. But what she doesnt tell them is that she is traveling to their home with her daughter, Katieand she has no idea if Davis will accept them. Seeking a teacher and mother for his son, Davis is not looking for love, but only for a womans touch to help bring some structure back into their lives. His sons upbringing is important to him, so when Sally meets him with her own daughtera daughter she neglected to mention in her lettershe is furious. How can she give his son the attention he needs, when she will be busy with her own child? But sometimes, anger is simply an expression of fearthe fear of losing a loved one once again.
